This week's reading

Today's service for Palm Sunday is led by Debbie Patrick with Nigel Worth preaching

Matthew 21: 1-11

A thought from Nigel

Palm Sunday is a time when we look at the "Triumphal Entry" into Jerusalem. I find it amazing that on one day Jesus is celebrated, exalted, lifted up and treated as the King to be crowned, but, only a few days later that celebration comes crashing down.

I can see how I could get sucked into the swelling noise and growing emotion of the day and week. It's hard to fathom how these same people can completely turn around.

This week take time to explore and examine - How would you react in that situation? The excitement of Palm Sunday, all the way down to the foot of the cross a few days later.

In the busyness of the week ahead I would encourage you to read through Matthew 21: 1-11 and use this as preparation for what's about to happen, the Low and importantly the High!

A prayer for Ukraine

God of all,
with alarm and concern we bring before you
the military intervention in Ukraine.

In a world you made for peace and flourishing,
we lament the use of armed force.

We mourn every casualty of this conflict,
every precious life extinguished by war.

We pray comfort for those who grieve
and those who are fearful.

Hear our longing that leaders and nations will honour the worth of all people by having the courage to resolve conflict through dialogue.

May all our human failings be transformed by your wonderful grace and goodness.

We ask this in the name of Christ,
the author of peace and sustainer of Creation.
Amen.

Palm crosses

On Palm Sunday It is traditional to receive a handmade cross but have you ever wondered who makes them?

Masasi African palm crosses are hand-woven without chemical treatment of the trees or palm leaves. The absence of chemical treatment protects the Masasi village environment and makes the palm crosses safe this Palm Sunday and their burnt ashes safe to use on next year's Ash Wednesday.

Poor in everything except spirit and African dwarf palm plants, the entire population of Masasi village find a role in hand-weaving Easter palm crosses from single strands of natural palm leaf.

Sourced entirely from a village in one exceptionally poor area of Southern Tanzania, African palm crosses are woven in one piece by the men, women and children of the Masasi village. Harvested from locally grown and nurtured dwarf African palms, hand-woven crosses give the villagers a life-line income.

Farming on a subsistence level, only the sale of their few surplus cashew nuts offers the villagers any hope of even the most basic levels of health care and education. When in 1965, Anglican missionary Alan Talbot founded the charity African Palm Crosses, the farming families of Masasi found the opportunity to lift themselves above the poverty line.

Weaving the strips of locally grown palm fronds into perfectly formed palm crosses, the villagers turned an ancient handicraft into a self-help opportunity to invest in the future health and education of their village. Through their distribution network 'African Palms', the proceeds from Masasi palm crosses are re-invested to meet basic needs and services that the developed world takes for granted.

Proceeds from African Palm Crosses are invested in children's eye clinics, improved seed stocks, HIV Awareness, water resources and environmental conservation.

Through these programmes, funded in part by African palm crosses, the health and wellbeing of children & adults is a substantially improved. With the income and education from African palm crosses, villagers have the resources and knowledge to invest in their children's future and in protecting their environment.
